Sally Campbell

Quaker singer/songwriter, Sally Campbell, returns with her autoharp and her playful, powerful and sometimes practical lyrics. For instance, if you have lost your keys or lost your way, she has songs for that: "Finding Lost Things" and "Slow Down." It is by slowing down, even lying down, that she finds songs when she "Lets the Love Flow." She has loved giving away a CD of some of her gift songs but now those and more are on YouTube. Come in person or tune in to hear even more of her heartwarming, heart-opening songs. Sally has invited Chris Brown to perform with her tonight because, not only is he an accomplished musician, he is the real deal, a mensch.

Chris Brown

In the songs of Chris Brown you'll find glimpses of people you've known, flashes of life's turning points, stirrings of emotions tied to moments in time. Brown captures the simple truths that we share in song, with offhand insight and humor. He writes of lessons learned and taking stock through life's journey. He chuckles over the big stuff, even death, but sings with tenderness of the small turns in life that leave their marks on all of us. Brown wins over audiences without gimmicks or bluster. He has an organic stage presence. All he needs are his honeyed rumble of a voice and an unteachable ability to make any song – a good-time singalong of a favorite standard or a self-penned meditation on the passage of time – sound genuine and of the moment.

On Monday, January 20, 2025, we will celebrate the birthday and legacy of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. We will also witness the installation of America's 47th President. As we all wrestle with the intertwined futures of our nation and our world, there are waves of thoughts and feelings that wash over us.

On Saturday, January 18th, we ask these questions: What would Dr. King say about where we are today? How does his legacy impact the choices we will be making going forward? How do we celebrate this important holiday when uncertainty chokes the air we breathe?

Chris "Oledude" Owens has invited various performers and presenters to build community by sharing their voices with all of us. Saturday night will be an intense and uplifting experience for all, so please share it with us! The evening's event will also be livestreamed, so don't let cold weather stop you from attending!

PVC members know that Oledude always produces a memorable show!
